

VANITY FAIR - Volume XXVI

“A Weekly Show of Political, Social, and Literary Wares.”

Issues published in the half-year, from July 2, 1881 to December 31, 1881.

Cartoons and selected excerpts

5. July 30, 1881.

NOTES.

Mr. Gladstone's harrowing pathos, when he found fault with anyone for despising him, wrung me much. It is wrong for persons to despise Mr. Gladstone. You may despise people who advertise for popularity ; who chop trees for the amusement of a gaping caucus ; who raise horrid notes of woe about a people who they never knew, never intended to know, and never cared for ; who use words in a polemical sense and then say afterwards that their words were lies, and that they meant something else while they were telling people about earnestness and God's justice and things of that kind. All those people you may, can, and must despise ; but you mustn't despise Mr. Gladstone.

STATESMEN—No. CCCLXVI

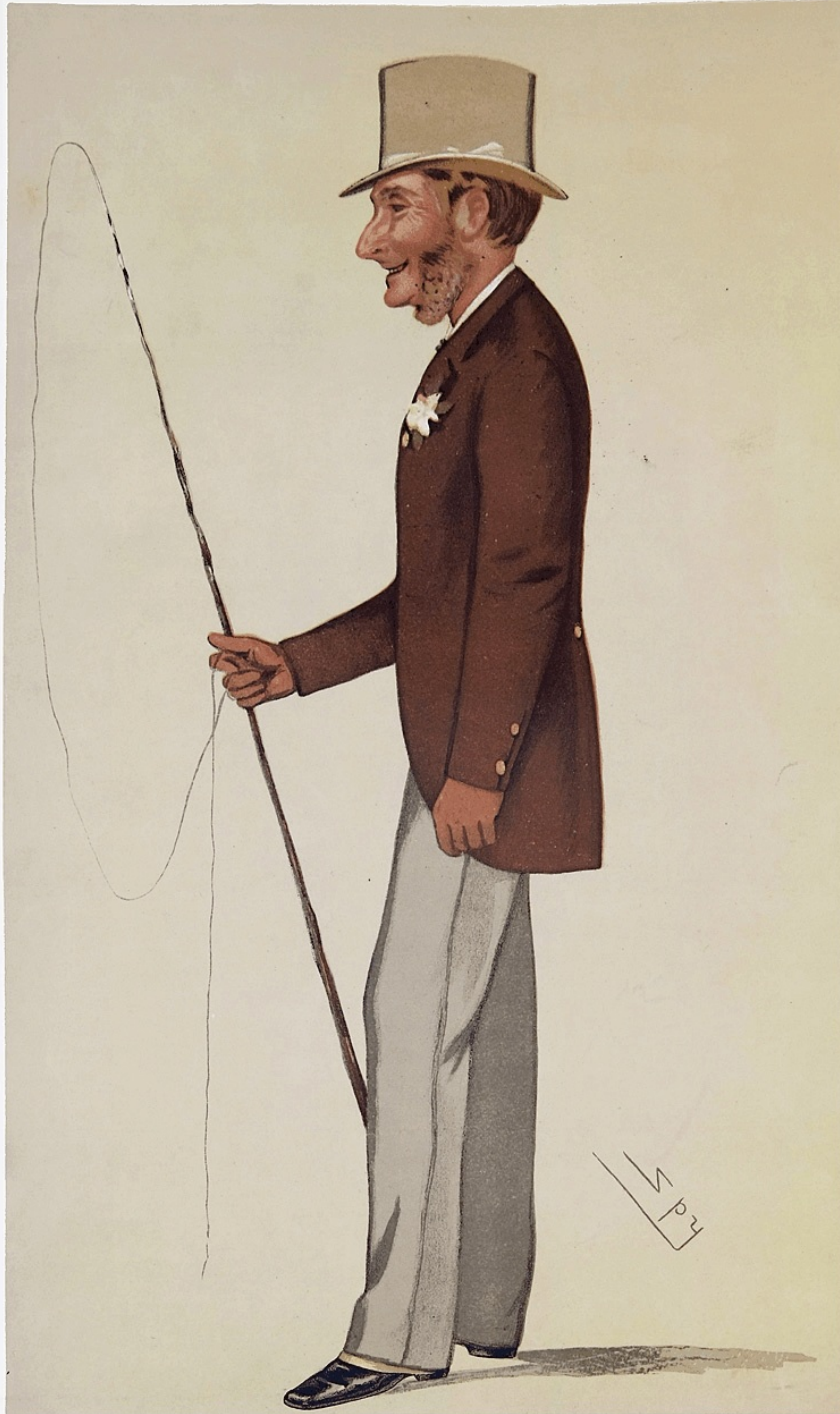

Lord Aveland.

“A great officer of State” by Spy

One of the projectors of the Bank of England, who was also a Lord Mayor, having been knighted by Queen Anne, left a line of Heathcotes who prospered and married well into the best English families, and one of whom—Sir Gilbert Heathcote—a distinguished Whig, was made a Peer in the beginning of the present century.

The present and second Lord Aveland was born fifty-one years ago, married a daughter of Lord Huntly, and succeeded at the age of thirty-seven years to his title and the hereditary dignity, which he inherited from his mother, of Deputy Lord Great Chamberlain. “Gibby” is a considerable land-owner, a Great Officer of State, and an excellent coachman. He is fond of sport. He is hospitable and kindly, and he has always been amiably disposed not only to the world at large, but even towards his own relations.

JEHU JUNIOR

Vincent Brooks, Day & Son, Lith.

"A great officer of State"