

VANITY FAIR - Volume XXVI

“A Weekly Show of Political, Social, and Literary Wares.”

Issues published in the half-year, from July 2, 1881 to December 31, 1881.

Cartoons and selected excerpts

22. Nov. 26, 1881

STATESMEN—No. CCCLXXXII

“hereditary whip” by T

Viscount Haywarden.

Born sixty-four years ago, Viscount Haywarden went into the 2nd Life Guards, and married a daughter of Admiral Fleming, until at thirty-nine he succeeded to his title, and being elected a representative Peer for Ireland, took up office of Tory Whip in the House of Lords, which his father had filled before him, and which seems to be almost hereditary in the family. Nobody could be better fitted for this post. He is an amiable man, of friendly converse and good manners. He carries an official snuff-box which is always open to the needy, and he has a sense of humour which enables him to appreciate, and upon occasion to tell, some good stories, as well as to make little epigrams of his own. He is not a speaker, but is discreet and trustworthy ; he manages the Tory Irish Peers ; and is a person of much consideration at the Carlton Club.

JEHU JUNIOR

VANITIES.

A duel with swords has been fought near Rome, between Captain Butler, an American who lost his right arm in the war and now paints pictures (and fights) with the left one, and an Italian who stared at him in the theatre and afterwards struck him for staring back again.

* * * * *

The Duke of Hamilton and Colonel Ferguson have been staying at Buxton for the last fortnight, and have derived much benefit from its healing waters.

* * * * *

A paragraph which appeared recently in the racing intelligence of these columns has given Messrs. Savory and Moore, the highly respectable chemists to the Queen, the impression that the writer intended to assert that one of the members of their firm was engaged in racing matters. No such intention however really existed, and I regret that an ambiguous phrase should have given rise to the misunderstanding.

"hereditary whip"